Learning about historical perspective

Overview
This lesson is one of a series that introduces six historical thinking concepts developed by Peter Seixas of the University of British Columbia. Each lesson supports teachers in using a video to introduce one of the concepts. The videos are available at http://www.tc2.ca/videos.php. The lessons are available in different versions for grades 6-8 and grades 9-12.

This lesson’s written materials and five-minute video, Historical Perspective, is an engaging way to introduce students to the concept of historical perspective. It features Chinese Canadians’ attitudes towards Canadian society during the early part of the 20th century and asks the question, Are we using our knowledge of the values and beliefs existing at the time to interpret the people, events and practices of the past? The video examines the example of the Chinese Students Soccer Team, who won the British Columbia Mainland Cup in 1933.

Historical perspective
We cannot transport ourselves back in time, so it is difficult to understand what the past meant to the people who lived it. Though our goal in history is to understand bygone times, our attempts are often clouded by our current concerns, beliefs and values, which obscure our understanding of the concerns, beliefs, and values of the people we are studying. How, then, do we understand a past that is so different from our present views and beliefs? Historical perspective involves viewing the past through the social, intellectual, and emotional lenses of the time in order to understand what life was like for those living then.

Objectives
Students will understand that:

• identify the historical values, beliefs and practices of a different time
• become aware of the differences between our worldview and the worldviews of the past
• determine whether presentism is influencing our interpretation of the time
Learning about historical perspective

Suggested activities

BEFORE THE VIDEO

Provide an example
Open by asking students how they would feel if they got a letter five months after it was sent. Then have them read the following scenario and speculate briefly with a partner on what it might have been like for people in the past to have to wait this long to receive return correspondence from their home country.

In 1858 people living in the British colony of Vancouver Island waited four to five months to receive a response to a letter sent from Victoria to London, England. This meant that important news from friends and family or advice and instructions from superiors took almost one-half year to receive.

Address the problem of presentism
Many students’ modern-day perspective will be influenced by the fact that they live in an age with near instantaneous access to information and contact with others. Explain to students that adopting a historical perspective is not a matter of thinking of how they personally would have felt in a particular historical situation but how the people at the time would likely have felt. Understanding how they feel about receiving a letter five months after it was sent is different than understanding what this meant to people living in 1858.

Consider contextual information
In order to understand the logic of a group’s actions or opinions, students need to learn about the time and place and put themselves into the mindset of the time by considering two kinds of contextual information:

- broad knowledge about a period and place in time
- specific information about the practices, values or beliefs

Reconsider the historical perspective
After considering this new information, invite students to reconsider how someone at the time would have felt about having to wait four to five months to receive a response to a letter. Ask students to share their responses with either a partner or the rest of the class (possible responses: excited, happy, and more connected to their home country than ever before).

Connect to the lesson
Ask students to consider what winning something like a sports tournament or writing contest would mean to them. Inform them that they are going to learn about a team of Chinese Canadian students who won a prestigious football tournament in 1933 and will be considering what this win meant from the perspective of the time.

DURING THE VIDEO

Invite students to view the video, Historical Perspective. Ask students to adopt a historic perspective while viewing the examples of Chinese Canadian immigrants in the early 20th century. If possible, provide students with multiple opportunities for viewing.
Learning about historical perspective

AFTER THE VIDEO

Introduce steps for historical perspective taking
Provide students with the following thinking strategy, a series of four steps, to assist them when inferring or analyzing historical perspective:

1. Consider what the event means from a present perspective (this identifies the presentism which students will need to avoid).
2. Identify the values, beliefs and practices of the time the event took place.
3. Determine whether presentism has influenced their interpretation.
4. Determine whether their interpretation is representative of the social norms of the time.

Develop historical perspective
Invite students to use the activity sheet, Historical perspective taking to analyze the perspective of the Chinese Students Soccer Team. Ask students to analyze the perspective of Chinese Canadians in 1933 about the win of the Chinese Students Soccer Team using evidence from the video and the information sheet, 1933 Champions: The Chinese Students Soccer Team. If desired, share the evidence found in Sample response: Historical perspective taking.

Assess for understanding
In order to assess whether students are beginning to develop an understanding of historical perspective, you might use the following activities:

- Listen to student conversations when they are asked to discuss historical perspective. Are they using criteria and evidence in their conversations?
- When identifying aspects of historical perspective such as presentism, do they choose powerful and relevant pieces of evidence to support their justifications?
- Examine student use of the activity sheet, Historical perspective taking. Have they selected accurate and relevant evidence?
- At a later date, when students are once again asked to consider the historical perspective of a particular event, do they continue to consider the criteria discussed during this lesson?
Learning about historical perspective

TAKING IT FURTHER

The following activities might be used to further develop the concept of historical perspective:

- Invite students to consider perspectives of people living in times being studied. (e.g., How did soldiers, Canadians generally, and the British perceive their involvement in World War I?)
- When studying historical figures, consider perspectives of the times they lived in. (e.g., Why might some women have opposed suffrage?)
- Look at a controversial issue/event/action and infer the perspective of many groups. (e.g., Did Canada respond appropriately to the October Crisis?)
- Identify and consider perspectives of groups of people not mentioned, or briefly mentioned in textbooks. (e.g., Aboriginal peoples, women, children, labourers and other people often not considered)
July 1st: Dominion Day. However, to the Chinese people living in Vancouver in the 1930s July 1st was known as ‘humiliation day.’ This was a reference to the 1923 Immigration Act, passed on July 1st and outlawing all Chinese immigration, with few exceptions.

The racism against Chinese Canadians during this period was official – as well as unofficial. Chinese Canadians were not allowed to vote or become professionals. They were viewed with suspicion, fear, and sometimes hatred by the white majority. Chinatown was considered a hotbed for crime: an undesirable ghetto inhabited by undesirable people. With the Depression raging, and racism and regulation limiting opportunities for employment, Vancouver’s Chinese Canadian community was troubled and oppressed in practically every aspect of life.

And yet, the spring of 1933 brought cause for wild celebration, due to the Chinese Students Soccer Team, which was only Chinese Canadian soccer team in the country. On May 29, in the final minutes of the province’s First Division League championship game, the match was tied. Then, the light and nimble Jack Soon scored and the East Vancouver field was swarmed with ecstatic supporters eager to share in the team’s victory. The Chinese Student Soccer Team had won the prestigious B.C. Mainland Cup, beating the University of BC varsity team.

That night, the main streets of Chinatown were alive with bands and firecrackers. The team paraded through the crowd in an open car, like a convoy of returning war heroes, holding their trophy up in the air, their pride matched by the cheering throngs that joined in their triumph. The next day was spontaneously declared a holiday: businesses were closed and the celebrations continued with free food and drink handed out to the public.

The team and its victory became a legend, a story passed down in Chinatown, a mark of pride to be remembered throughout the decades.

Source: http://www.canada.com/story.html?id=b0f277bd-c4b9-421a-a764-c8ca995f2763
| Event: __________________________________________________ |
| Time period: ____________________________________________ |
| Evidence (from secondary accounts and primary sources) |
| Perspective at the time |
| Social beliefs, values and practices surrounding a specific event |
| Consider feelings and motivations, what mattered and didn't matter, state of knowledge and reactions |

Historical Perspective Taking

Name: _________________________________

Student activity sheet
Sample Student Response

Historical Perspective Taking

Event:
[Event description]

Time Period:
[Time period description]

Perspective at the Time

- Evidence (from secondary accounts and primary sources) on how [time period] thought and acted.

Consider Feelings and Motivations

- Consider feelings and motivations behind actions.

Social Beliefs, Values and Practices

- Consider how social beliefs, values, and practices were expressed and influenced society.

- Evidence that [time period] valued [social beliefs, values, and practices].

Did it matter?

- Did the social beliefs, values, and practices matter in the context of [time period]?

Consider Feelings and Motivations

- Reflect on the implications and outcomes of [social beliefs, values, and practices].

---

Historical Perspective Taking

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Event</th>
<th>Time Period</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>[Event]</td>
<td>[Time period]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Name:

[Student name]